Anyone working in a managed care research setting, for example any of the research centers associated with the health care systems research network (formerly HMORN) would be a good resource. Though they may not all engage in prevention research per se, they could all speak to leveraging the Electronic Health Record (EHR) to conduct health research. Several of the names below fit that bill. However I've tried to compile a somewhat broader list that also includes some international folks. Most of the latter I don't know personally, but I have cited some of their work in my accompanying bibliography and reviewed their online profiles.
